Money Couldn't Do It.

Money wouldn't really pay for some medicines. In cases of acute or chronic cases of rheumatism Martin's Rheumatic and Blood Elixir has more than a dollars-and-cents value.

You can always feel safe with a bottle of this reliable medicine in the house. Makes the blood pure and rich. Has no equal as a tonic for enfeebled conditions of the system. Cures rheumatism by dissolving the uric acid. All dealers sell it.

This was news indeed—news so unexpected and startling that I forgot all caution.

"Then what road do they call this?" She laughed at my evident ignorance, as well as the eagerness of my tone.

"Really, you are a most peculiar guide," she exclaimed gayly. "You almost convince me that you are lost. Fortunately, sir, out of my vast knowledge of this mysterious region, I am able to enlighten you to some extent. We are now riding due southward along the Allentown pike."

Craig leaped forward so as to look across her horse's neck to where I rode on the opposite side.

"May I speak a word, sir?" he asked, cautiously.

"Certainly, sergeant; do you make anything out of all this?"

"Yes, sir," he answered eagerly. "I know now exactly how we missed it, and where we are. The cut-off to the White Briar I spoke to you about this afternoon cannot be more than a hundred yards below here."

"Ride ahead carefully then, and see if you can locate it. Be cautious; there may be a picket stationed there. We will halt where we are until you return."

He swung forward his carbine where it would be handy for instant service and trotted ahead into the darkness. The woman's horse, being comparatively fresh and restless, danced a little in an effort to follow, but I restrained him with a light hand on the bit, and we sat waiting in silence.

I was eager to be off, to make up by hard riding the tedious delay of this night's work, and constantly listening in dread for some sound of struggle down the roadway. But all remained silent until I could dimly distinguish the returning hoof-beats of the sergeant's horse, and so anxious was I to economize time that I was already urging our mounts forward when his shadow grew black in front, and he wheeled in at my side.

"No picket, sir."

"Very well, sergeant; when we come to the turn you are to ride a few rods in advance of us and will set a good pace, for we must make up for all this lost time."

"Very well, sir; here is the turn—to your right."

I could dimly distinguish the opening designated, and as we wheeled 'till he at once clapped spurs to his horse and forged ahead. In another moment he had totally disappeared, and as I urged our reluctant mounts to more rapid speed all sound of his progress was instantly lost in the pounding of our own hoofs on the hard road.

CHAPTER IV.

A Woman With a Temper.

I think we must have been fully an hour at it, riding at no mean pace, and with utter disregard of danger. Although I knew little of where we were, and nothing as to the condition of the path we traversed, yet so complete was my confidence in Craig that I felt no hesitancy in blindly following the pace he set. Then a black shape loomed up before us so suddenly that it was only by a quick effort I prevented a collision. Even as I held my horse poised half in air, I perceived it was Craig himself who blocked the way.

"What is it, sergeant?" "A picket, sir, at the end of the road," he said, quietly. "I hindered them they'd have some sort of guard there, so I crept up on the quiet to be sure. The feller helped me out a bit by striking a match to see what time 'twas, or I reckon I'd a walked over him in the dark."

"Had we better ride him down?" asked, thinking only how rapidly the night hours were speeding and of the importance of the duty pressing upon us.

"Not with that woman, sir," he answered in a low, reproachful voice. "Besides we never could get through without a shot, and if by any chance it should turn out to be a cavalry outpost—an I sorter reckon that's what it is—why, our horses are in no shape for a hard run. You uns better wait here, sir, an' let me tend ter that souter man quiet like, an' then p'raps we uns kin all slip by without a stirrin' up ter patrol."

"Well," I said, reluctantly, yielding to what I felt was doubtless the wiser course, and mechanically grasping the rein he held out to me, "Go ahead. But be careful, and don't waste any time. If we hear the sound of a shot we shall ride forward upon spur."

"All right, sir, but there'll be no fuss, fer I know just whar ther feller is."

Time seems criminally long when one is compelled to wait in helpless uncertainty, every nerve on strain.

PRESBYTERY

W. Wilson, of New Martinsville, recommended a negative vote on overture No. 1 of the General Assembly, proposing biennial sessions of the general body instead of annual sessions as heretofore.

Affirmative answers were given to overtures No. 3 and 3 from the General Assembly, the former of which concerned certain changes in the formula of baptism and the latter of which related to the appointment of a committee on vacancy and supply.

The report of this committee was adopted.

A report from the committee on brotherhood was submitted by the chairman thereof, the Rev. J. W. Wilson, and a report on the committee on temperance, was submitted by its chairman, W. J. Hazlett, of French Creek. Both were adopted.

The Rev. James E. Bird, of the West Virginia Methodist Episcopal conference, was received as a corresponding member of the presbytery.

PAYING WELL

In the Shinnston field is Brought in by the South Penn.

In the Shinnston oil pool, the South Penn Oil Company has completed No. 6 on the B. Kennedy farm and has a better producer than the late average in that pool. The well got the pay at 54 feet in the fifty-foot sand and produced 117 barrels the first forty-eight hours. In the same district, the same company has completed No. 4 on the L. Humphrey farm and has a 15 or 20-barrel pumper. On the West Fork river, Eagle district, Harrison county, the Lumberport Gas Company has drilled a test on the F. W. Cunningham farm through the fourth sand and has a duster. It will be drilled to the fifth sand. On the same stream, and in the same district, Schaffner Brothers have drilled a test on their own farm through the fifth sand and have a light gasser.

FLEMING SETTLES.

John A. Fleming, ex-sheriff, has paid to the county treasurer the amount the state tax commissioner claims is due the county and state from his administration as sheriff.

NOTICE.

To whom it may concern: Notice is hereby given that the undersigned, Andrew Moore, residing in the town of Shinnston, Harrison County, West Virginia, will on the 22nd day of September, 1911, at the court house of said county, make application to the Circuit Court of said Harrison county for a state license to carry a revolver.

My occupation is that of special policeman for the Fairmont and Clarksburg Traction Company, having been appointed such special police officer by the Governor of the State of West Virginia in accordance with the provisions of Section 21 of Chapter 145 of the Code of West Virginia.
